Picturing a Moment

What do you see in this photo? How many people are there, and what are some of them doing? This photograph was taken over fifty years ago by a photographer named Danny Lyon. The photo shows people who were part of a very important and special moment in United States history. The man holding the papers is named John Lewis. He is an important person who has helped many people during his life. Today, he works in Atlanta on fairness and equality for everyone! The photographer took this photo because he wanted the world to know how important this moment and these people were, and he wanted us to remember it for a long time.

Who is an important or special person in your life? Why is this person important to you, and what do they do that makes them special? Think of your special person and draw a picture of them. If this person is still living, let them know how you feel! If they don't live at home with you, send them your drawing in the mail, with a caregiver's help. Special people are all around us!

Before you mail your drawing, share a picture of it on Instagram with #HighMuseumatHome.
